Missouri Southern Students will:

- Attend small classes and receive personal attention from their professors
- Have the opportunity to participate in community service and internships that give them classroom experience
- Graduate being prepared to step into the classroom and teach from day one; participate in active, hands-on lessons using the newest technology and create real-world projects that are classroom-ready

"I chose to attend the College of Health, Life Sciences and Education at MSSU to pursue a degree in teacher education because I was aware of its reputation for having exceptional advisors, professors, and a commitment to providing high-quality education. With the guidance of these great advisors and the rigorous learning environment offered, I will be well-prepared for future endeavors."
